6 - PROJECT PROFILE - Homeopathic Training College & Homeopathic Hospital
Sector	Training Institute
Geographical Location	5 Acres state owned land at Kalawana
Responsible Agent(s)	Investor, BOI etc..
Project Description & Rationale /Objectives	ESTABLISHMENT OF A HOMEOPATHIC TRINING COLLEGE & HOMEOPATHIC HOSPITAL The project aims to construct and operate a Homeopathic Training Institute with all facilities inclusive of a Hospital in Sri Lanka.
Project Size	USD 5.0 Mn Private investors are encouraged to undertake construction and management of the Homeopathic hospital with Government supervision.
Proposed Procurement Process	Investment Model Foreign Direct Investment
Planned Start Date	Project can be initiated with immediate effect, by submission of a proposal to the Board of Investment of Sri Lanka
Project Documentation	A large portion of the population in Sri Lanka is reported to be heavily dependent on indigenous medicine to meet their health care needs. Homeopathy being one safest and cost effective system of medicinal practices all over the world, there is an increasing demand for its professional service. Since there is no Homeopathic Training Collage in Sri Lanka, students who wish to study this system of medicine go to neighboring countries such as India and Sri Lanka at a great cost to the country. The project will enhance the facilities available in the country for studying homeopathy and more local students who are willing to learn this system of medicine at much less cost. It will save a significant amount of foreign exchange.
Current Status	Initial Project Concept – Investor / Developer could contact the Board of Investment of Sri Lanka for further details regarding the proposed Project
Existing Policy, Institutional Frame Work and concessions to be offered	a. Applicable Tax Concessions shall be granted by the Board of Investment of Sri Lanka. b. Duty free facilities can be given for the importation of equipment, Building Materials etc.. Under the BOI Incentives. c. The BOI would facilitate in obtaining of clearances / approvals from the Ministry of Indigenous Health for the Proposed Project.

You must, must, must … outline your story before you sit down to write your screenplay.

Wait, here's a better way of putting it. You must, must, must … outline your story before putting it in screenplay form.

The second version is way better because outlining is an integral part of the screenwriting process. So, to say that you must outline BEFORE you write your screenplay is misleading and undermines the importance of one of a screenwriter's most important tools.

Now when I say outline, I don't mean a little two-page beat sheet that you can jot down in 10 minutes. I mean a full scene-by-scene outline of your entire story from the beginning to end. An outline that clearly defines the act breaks. An outline that even describes what the dialogue will be in every scene. An outline so insanely detailed that when it's finally time to fire-up Final Draft and type your story into screenplay form … you only have to think about one thing: How to make it all sound awesome on the page so that the read will be a breeze.

In the same way an artist first sketches his subject before he commits paint to canvas, you must also sketch out your entire story before you commit words to Final Draft.

The great thing about the outlining process is that it's freeing. When you outline you can make tons of changes to your story without the pressure of writing or rewriting the actual screenplay. You're free to play with your idea and get your plot points structured correctly without stressing about writing snappy dialogue or finding a cool way to describe your car chase.

The outlines for my screenplays are sometimes 40 pages long. I was once hired to work on the rewrite of a pretty well-known horror classic. The producer was a straight-up maniac who didn't know what he wanted. I delivered three 40-page outlines to this joker before he even cracked a tobacco-stained smile. Then it took one more version for him to give me the go-ahead to write the script.

Let me repeat that. I wrote four 40-page outlines just to get the story perfect before putting it in screenplay form. Yeah, I do not screw around.

Now, I know that some of you are on the lazy side and I can already hear the whining. "Forty page outlines? Are you crazy? That's too much hard work."

Damn right, it's hard work! Do you think studios will pay hundreds of thousands of dollars for some half-baked story that you threw together between X-Box sessions? Get real!

MADELINE AND THE WEDDING

I wrote many episodes of Madeline, a number of which are available on video. The show won the 2001-2002 Daytime Emmy award for Best Animated Show, which means I received a statuette for my participation as a writer. This is the script for the award-winning episode which the judges viewed.

Preliminary Outline and Purpose Statement

Purpose Statement:
One or more sentences that state what you plan to accomplish in your paper.

Identify a cultural issue with global relevance. This could be a problem that exists, a concern, a threat, etc. In these instances, it is important to address the cause(s) of the problem, the effect(s) of the problem, and a possible solution.

Example:
I will research and explain the problem of the increasing number of the children with autism in America and the current thinking on what has caused this increase. I will research and relate the effects of this increase on families, society, and governmental agencies and policies. After analyzing the research on the various theories of what causes autism, I will examine one or more possible solutions comparing pros and cons with the end result being a proposal for how to decrease the rate of autism in children.

Preliminary Outline:
An informal list of ideas to cover in your paper in the order that you plan to cover them.

The order of headings reflects the purpose statement.
This will transform into your formal outline as you add, delete, combine headings and subheadings as you finish your research.

- Step 1: Set up paper with correct heading.
- Step 2: Center title.
- Step 3: Use Roman numerals for the main topics. Subtopics are given capital letters. Then, Arabic numerals, then small letters, etc.
- Step 4: Indent subtopics. Indentations should be made so that all letters or numbers of the same kind will come directly under one another in a vertical line.
- Step 5: When subtopics are included in an outline, there must always be more than one subtopic. Because subtopics are divisions of the topic above them, you must have at least two parts when you subdivide.
- Step 6: A subtopic must be closely related to the topic under which it is placed.
- Step 7: Since topics and subtopics are not sentences, they should not be followed by periods.
- Step 8: Main topic and subtopic headings should be in parallel format such as all nouns or all participial phrases, etc.

Here is the way I see our screenplay guide: unravel the map - do you have an opening scene that defines the movie? The launch point - Where are we, and with what are we? we're? First stage, how do you see a normal day in this world? Changing the course ": what sets our characters on their journey from normal? The foot of the mountain, okay, we're making this trip together. Up the side: it starts hard, but you get used to the problems as you move on. Through the cave, do you have a B story? Establish that story only now. Re-evaluate the problem, it's in the middle. Is there another way to do it? Try and fail: things start to crumble, can they handle it? The fall, the worst happens, something so bad you don't think you can get up. The hidden track: what do your characters discover about themselves/the problem they never saw before? Race to the end, they're running no matter what. The treasure chest, did they get what they came? Where we're going from here, show us the world with a new light, it sucks what follows. I created this map of history to help myself when I describe new ideas of scripts (perhaps some of the public domain), and I think it applies to many different genres and sizes of movies. So let's review some examples of storytelling map and see how it works and why it's a useful scripting tool. If you want to follow the map of the story with the Rocky movie, see this post! And show you how each of these points aligns to what happens inside them. Ideally, you can choose any title and track the map of the story in each of them. I wanted to use our scripting technique because I thought it would inspire you. Your opening scene is important, so when you start a scheme, choose something that grabs the viewer and pushes them into the world. One of my favorites of all time is Unbreakable.But two stories of origin. We learn about Mr. Glass, and then we started learning about his opponent, David Dunn, after his train crashed. These set up the entire film and its theme. We're on the verge of our seat right away. When you write the first act of any movie you want to start knowing the characters, my favorite movie that makes this is The Goonies. It's amazing to see children meet and learn their personalities just before we start an adventure with the whole team. How is a normal day in this world? Before something can happen, we have to see what homeostasis is within this universe. The best actions of characters are reactions to the world. So let's learn about the world. Even if it is a fantasy world like the region in The Lord of the Rings, we need to know how it looks "normal." That way, when the characters explode, we can evaluate and understand their reactions. Change the course ", what distinguishes our characters in their journey of normality? It's time to get your characters out of the door and on their journey. One of the best examples of this is when Luke Skywalker runs with Ben Kenobi after Uncle Owen and Aunt Beru died. His life has changed, and now he will join the rebels and learn about the strength to fight injustice. The foot of the mountain is fine, we're making this trip together. to restore the world. This is when we start having fun in the world. Why are people here to watch your movie? At Titanic, it's when romance begins and fails over and over.
